WHAT WE DO

The teaching hospital plays a central role in the College of Veterinary Medicine’s mission of teaching, service and discovery. Veterinary students rotate through the different services the teaching hospital offers during their clinical education to learn the art and science of clinical practice working side-by-side with outstanding faculty members. The teaching hospital also prepares future veterinarians for specialty practice, post-graduate education, academics and research.

Clients and patients of the teaching hospital benefit from the combined expertise of board-certified faculty specialists, residents, interns, veterinary students and veterinary technicians who utilize a team-based approach to patient healthcare.

The Auburn University College of Veterinary Medicine’s Teaching Hospital (large and small animal) operate 24/7 for emergency services.

THE AUBURN UNIVERSITY VETERINARY CLINIC
A Community Practice
The Auburn University Veterinary Clinic is a full-service, primary-care veterinary clinic for preventative and wellness care for pets in the community.

Located in the Bailey Small Animal Teaching Hospital, no referral is necessary to make an appointment.

The AUVC offers state-of-the-art preventative, diagnostic and therapeutic care for all stages of a pet’s life, from ensuring healthy growth, promoting health and well-being, to alleviating illness, pain and suffering.

The Avian and Exotic Service within the AUVC provides wellness care, specialized diagnostic testing, medical treatments, surgical options and emergency care for exotic companion animals. Animals seen in the service include birds; turtles; rabbits; non-venomous snakes and other reptiles; pocket pets including hedge hogs, ferrets, guinea pigs, gerbils and hamsters; and pet chickens. While the AUVC focuses on wellness and disease prevention, should a pet have a more complex diagnosis or a health crisis, referral to a specialty service in the Bailey Small Animal Teaching Hospital can be provided.
